Article 1.

DANIEL BOONE AND WILDERNESS ROAD

Daniel Boone was a pioneer, explorer, soldier, businessman, and politician most famous for his exploration and settlement of Kentucky. Born in November of 1734 in Reading, Pennsylvania to his Quaker parents who were fleeing religious persecution in England, he was the sixth of eleven children. Growing up at the edge of the frontier, he received his first rifle at the age of 12 and began to learn hunting and trapping skills from both local settlers as well as hunters from the nearby Lenape tribe.

The Transylvania company commissioned Daniel Boone to create a trail from Fort Chiswell, Virginia through the Cumberland Gap in 1775. The Transylvania Company chose Boone because he was considered to be the most experienced and knowledgeable explorer of the area at the time. The company's goal was to colonize the resource-rich area and establish "Kentucky" as the 14th official colony.

- Native Americans such as the Cherokee already used these lands for living and hunting. To avoid aggression from the Native Americans, who had already attacked Daniel Boone's group of settlers in 1773, killing multiple people including one of his sons, the head of the Transylvania Company attempted to negotiate with the Cherokee directly. A compromise was eventually reached; the Cherokee agreeing to sell the land in exchange for 10,000 lbs. of goods. Predictably, the goods were never received as the colonel governor of Virginia later nullified the sale.
- In March of 1775, Daniel Boone led a group of around thirty men to begin the journey through the wilderness. Using axes, they began in present-day Kingsport, Tennessee, and started trailblazing north. Early traces of paths and trails used by buffalo as well as native American warriors were used to help create the road.

After getting through the Clinch Mountains, the party crossed Clinch River near present-day Speers Ferry, Virginia, following Stock Creek until they were able to cross through Kane's Gap into the Powell River Valley. Soon before reaching their desired location for the new settlement at the Kentucky River, the group was attacked by Shawnee tribe members, who had not conceded their rights to the land. Most of the group managed to escape, but there were some fatalities. Soon after, the group finally arrived south-side of the Kentucky River in what is now Madison County, Kentucky in April.

- Wilderness Road was more than 200 miles, starting in Virginia making its way through multiple mountain ranges and into central Kentucky, allowing the foundation of the first settlements such as Boonsboro, Benjamin Logan's, and Harrod Town. At first, the road was steep and rough, the only way through being horseback or on foot. However, the rough terrain was not the only obstacle travelers faced. Outlaws would often ambush small groups in order to rob and loot anything of value. Native Americans from tribes such as Chickamauga and Shawnee, who no agreements had been reached with, would also organize attacks against settlers encroaching their ancestral hunting grounds. Dangerous wildlife such as bears, panthers, and wolves as well as venomous snakes and insects posed a threat too.
- Despite the danger, Wilderness Road was used by hundreds of thousands of people. Eventually, using Native American trails, the road was lengthened all the way up through Louisville, Kentucky ending at the Falls of the Ohio. The trail was also widened and re-routed in some areas to allow the passage of wagons and carriages.

- It is estimated that as many as 300,000 settlers traveled along Wilderness Road from 1775 to 1810. The route was also used by farmers and merchants to sell their goods at markets closer to the coasts as well as supplying much needed food and items to new and growing settlements in Kentucky.

Use of Wilderness Road had declined by 1840. The progression of steamboats, ferries, and waterway travel through the Erie Canal as well as the opening of the National Road led to the eventual decline of travelers. A segment of Wilderness Road was one of the first roads to be paved in the United States.

Article 2.

WORLD ENGLISH

The first significant step in the progress of English towards its status as a world language took place in the last decades of the 16th century. At that time, the number of mother-tongue English speakers in the world is thought to have been between five and seven million, almost all of them living within the British Isles. Between the end of the reign of Elisabeth I (1603) and the beginning of the reign of Elisabeth II (1952), the figure increased almost fiftyfold to around 250 millions, the majority (around four-fifths) living outside the British Isles. Most of the people were, and continue to be, Americans, and it is in the 16th-century North America that we find a fresh dimension being added to the history of the language.

- The first expedition from England to the New World was commissioned by Walter Raleigh in 1584, and proved to be a failure. A group of explorers landed near Roanoke Island, in what is today North Carolina, and established a small settlement. Conflict with the native people followed, and it proved necessary for a ship to return to England for help and supplies. By the time these arrived, in 1590, none of the original group of settlers could be found. The mystery of their disappearance has never been solved.

The first permanent English settlement dates from 1607, when an expedition arrived in Chesapeake Bay. The colonists called their settlement Jamestown (after James I) and the area Virginia (after the "Virgin Queen", Elisabeth). Further settlements quickly followed along the coast, and also on the nearby islands, such as Bermuda. Then, in November 1620, the first group of puritans, 35 members of the English Separatist Church, arrived on the Mayflower in the company of 67 other settlers. Prevented by storms from reaching Virginia, they landed at Cape Cod Bay, and established a settlement at what is now Plymouth, Massachusetts.

- The group was extremely mixed, ranging in age from young children to people in their 50s, and with diverse regional, social, and occupational backgrounds. What the “Pilgrim Fathers” (as they were later called) had in common was their search for a land where they could find a new religious kingdom free from humiliation and “purified” from the church practices they had experienced in England. It was a successful settlement, and by 1640 about 25,000 immigrants had come to the area.
- By the time of the first census, in 1790, the population of the country was around 4 million, most of whom lived along the Atlantic coast. A century later, after the opening up of the west, the population numbered over 50 million, spread throughout the continent. The accent which emerged can now be heard all over the so-called Sunbelt (from Virginia to southern California), and it is the accent most commonly associated with present-day American speech. It was not only England which influenced the directions the English language was to take in America. The Spanish had occupied large parts of the west and south-west. The French were present in the northern territories, around St. Lawrence River, and throughout the middle regions (French Louisiana) as far as the Gulf of Mexico. The Dutch were in New York (originally New Amsterdam) and the surrounding area. Large numbers of Germans began to arrive at the end of the 17th century settling mainly in Pennsylvania and its hinterland. In addition, there were increasing numbers of Africans entering the south, as a result of the slave trade, and this dramatically increased in the 18th century.
  - During the 17th century, new shiploads of immigrants brought an increasing variety of linguistic backgrounds. Pennsylvania, for example, came to be settled mainly by Quakers whose origins were mostly in the Midlands and the north of England. People speaking very different kinds of English thus found themselves living alongside each other, as the “middle” Atlantic areas (New York, in particular) became the focus of settlement. As a consequence, the sharp divisions between regional dialects gradually began to blur. The concept of the “melting pot” must have applied very early on to immigrant accents.
  - In the 18th century, there was a vast wave of immigration from Northern Ireland. The Irish had been migrating to America from around 1600, but the main movements took place during the 1720s, when around 50,000 Irish and Scotch-Irish immigrants arrived. By the time independence was declared (1776), it is thought that one in seven of the colonial population was Scotch-Irish. Many stayed along the coast, especially in the area of Philadelphia, but most moved inland through the mountains in search of land. They were seen as frontier people, with an accent which at the time was described as "broad". The opening up of the south and west was largely due to the pioneering spirit of this group of settlers.
