TEXT

Read the text and answer the following questions.

Ruth took some of Anthea's advice, had her hair cut, won a scholarship from the British Council which entitled her to a year in France working on her thesis, and fell in love. Only the last fact mattered to her, although she would anxiously examine her hair to see if it made her look any better. She was attractive enough for a clever girl, but it was principally as a clever woman that she was attractive. She remained in ignorance of this; for she believed herself to be dim and unworldly and had frequently been warned by Anthea to be on her guard. "Sometimes I wonder if you are in your right senses", said Anthea, striking her own brow in disbelief.

She did this when Ruth confessed that she was in love with Richard Hirst, who had stopped her in the corridor to congratulate her on winning the scholarship and had insisted on taking her down to the refectory to lunch. Anthea's gesture was prompted by the fact that Richard was a prize beyond the expectations of most women and certainly beyond those of Ruth. He was one of those exceptionally beautiful men whose violent presence makes other men, however superior, look makeshift. Richard was famous on at least three accounts. He had the unblemished blond good looks of his Scandinavian mother, who was a resolute Christian; and he had an ulcer. Women who had had no success with him assumed that the ulcer was a result of the Christianity, for Richard, a psychologist by training, was a student counselor, and would devote three days a week to answering the telephone and persuading anxious undergraduates.

Then Richard would win home to his parish and stay up for two whole nights answering the telephone to teenage dropouts, battered wives, and alcoholics. There seemed to be no end to the amount of bad news he could absorb. Richard had been known to race off on his bicycle to the scene of a domestic drama and there wrestle with the conscience of an abusive husband, wife, mother, father, brother, sister.

He was rarely at home. He rarely slept. He never seemed to eat. His ulcer was the concern of every woman he had ever met in his adult life. His dark golden hair streamed and his dark blue eyes were clear and obstinate as he pedaled off to the next crisis.

Into Ruth's dazed and grateful ear he spoke of his unmarried mothers and his battered wives. She thought him exemplary and regretted having no good results to tell him about. The race for virtue, which she had always read about, was on.

So Ruth took more of Anthea's advice and found a flat for herself.

1. What was the most important thing for Ruth?
  - a. She had found a flat of her own.
  - b. She had a new hairstyle.
  - c. She could go to France to work on her thesis.

  - a. That she didn't have much knowledge.
  - b. That she was pretty and clever.
  - c. That she was out of her senses.
  - d. That she was always on her guard.

3. Anthea believed that...
  - a. Richard would never pay attention to such girls as Ruth.
  - b. Ruth had made the right choice.
  - c. Ruth was too good for such men as Richard.
  - d. Ruth and Richard couldn't be together for a long time.

4. What kind of lifestyle did Richard have?
  - a. He was fond of racing his bicycle.
  - b. He spent all his time helping others.
  - c. He devoted all his time to his ulcer treatment.
  - d. He spent his time praying in church.

5. Why did Ruth consider him to be an ideal?
  - a. He took care of her well.
  - b. He always helped suffering people.
  - c. He found time to talk to her.
  - d. He was helping her with her thesis.
